At the tip of a global sportswear empire, which is housed on the U.K.'s most famous high street, Nike can certainly afford to be the best. For years, it has reigned as the sport's premier apparel company, and the LeBron James's and Giannis Antetokounmpo's of the business reign above all others. But it's not just the Nike Kobe and LeBron logos that are inscribed upon the sneakers and apparel of the basketball community. Like all of Nike's other brands, every line of equipment has a bit of player dust on it. From non-exclusive stars like LeBron to champion's like Kobe, there's a tiny, but dedicated community of people that have a love for Nike's footwear, apparel and sportswear. We're going to take a look at some of the most significant moments in Nike's history. The best players and best companies in the sport of basketball and we're going to take a look at the moments that made them what they are.
