The present invention relates to an apparatus for opening a drum in a pulp mill. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method for opening a pulp mill drum such that the opening may be done automatically. A conventional method of opening a pulp mill drum typically includes cutting through the circular wall of the drum and dislodging a portion of the wall. This process can be accomplished manually or using water jets. In addition, the direction of rotation of the drum is changed to permit gravity to dislodge the portion of the wall. This manual process results in decreased production and increased expense. However, at least in some instances, it is desirable to rotate the drum in the same direction without increasing the chances that the entire wall will be removed from the drum. It is an object of the present invention to provide a method of opening a pulp mill drum that minimizes manual labor and decreases production costs. It is a further object of the present invention to provide an apparatus and method for opening a pulp mill drum that can be performed automatically. It is a further object of the present invention to provide an apparatus and method for opening a pulp mill drum that does not disrupt the normal operation of the pulp mill. In accordance with the present invention, a method of opening a pulp mill drum includes rotating a pulpmill drum in a first direction to dislodge a portion of the wall of the drum from the drum body. The portion of the wall is then dislodged from the drum body and secured to the drum body. The drum is rotated in a second direction and a pulpmill drum head is removed from the pulp mill drum head. The drum body and the drum head are severed from the drum. The drum body and the drum head are then disassembled from the pulpmill drum. In accordance with another aspect of the present invention, an apparatus for opening a pulp mill drum includes a pulpmill drum, an input device, and a motor. The pulpmill drum has an outer surface. The input device is coupled to the motor and generates a signal indicative of a predetermined pulpmill drum body rotation speed. The motor, in response to the signal, rotates the pulpmill drum at the predetermined rotation speed. The apparatus further includes a drum disassembler coupled to the pulpmill drum for severing the pulpmill drum body and the drum head from the pulpmill drum. Other features and advantages of the present invention will become apparent from the following detailed description, taken in conjunction with the accompanying drawings,

Evidence-based medicine and antiangiogenic treatment of brain tumors. Despite advances in treatments for glioblastoma (GBM), the prognosis for patients with this disease remains grim. Antiangiogenic agents have demonstrated therapeutic efficacy in the treatment of a variety of solid tumors, and their application to brain tumor therapy is now being explored. Substantial preclinical data support the application of these agents in the treatment of GBM. These preclinical data are supported by early clinical results from phase II trials involving the use of single agents bevacizumab, sorafenib, and aflibercept, and combinations of bevacizumab plus irinotecan, bevacizumab plus cediranib, or bevacizumab plus paclitaxel. With the exception of bevacizumab plus irinotecan, the addition of an antiangiogenic agent to standard therapy in these phase II studies failed to result in improved survival, suggesting the need for a more rational trial design. There is also clinical evidence suggesting that the neurobiological effects of such agents may be partially responsible for their failure to significantly prolong survival. Riboflavin status and risk of eczema in the St. Petersburg study. Eczema is a common chronic skin disease. As part of the Russian St. Petersburg study of eczema we collected data on micronutrients including riboflavin and examined their association with eczema. In a population-based cross-sectional study 1778 adults aged 25-74 years were interviewed in 2007-2009 in the city of St. Petersburg, Russia. Eczema was diagnosed based on standard clinical examination. After adjustment for potential confounders the relative risk of eczema in riboflavin-deficient subjects was 3.4 (95% CI 1.3-8.8) compared with that of riboflavin-sufficient subjects. In the replication sample, in which data on riboflavin were only available for 795 subjects, the relative risk was 2.8 (1.2-6.2). These data are in line with meta-analyses reporting low prevalence of eczema in riboflavin-deficient populations, including other Russian-speaking countries in Central and Eastern Europe.
